OLD-TIME FIGHTERS.

When old-time knights went forth with poles, and pushed each other off their horses, the ground, we learn, from ancient scrolls, was often littered up with corses; for when a man is weighted down with half a ton of cast-iron raiment, and falls, and lands upon his crown, his life is apt to be the payment. I've read of forty armored knights who perished in a morning's tilting (of such the ancient scriv'ners write-of such the bards were always lilting). Oh, there was clanging then of steel, and there was screech of boit and casting, and you might see the charger reel, and hear its rider fortune blasting. And when the vanquished hero sunk, so plainly dead that none could doubt it, a dray would gather up the junk, and nothing more was said about it. Oh. good old days, when fighters fought, and in the tourney played their capers! They seorned to fill with bally-rot the columns of the sporting papers. (Copyright, 1909, by George Matthew Adams.)

O'Brien Is Aggressive.

O'Brien is a faster man in every respe than Johnson. He is a greater boxer. He has had a world of experience, but he lacks the hitting power, it is believed, patience and cautiousness. But in six rounds, it is admitted that O'Brien has no superior when it comes down to a question of rapid-fire attack and generalship. That is why ring sharps hold the ofnion that if O'Brien adopts the taction e used in the recent fight here with Ketchell, he will make Johnson hit some to get an even break. O'Brien knows that Johnson is a dangerous person in half clinches, and that he can inflict uppercuts, which were fatal to Eurns For that reason O'Brien intends to box
